Last Friday night, Arte Fuse headed to Brooklyn to check out some shows in Bushwick. Our last stop on the agenda was the Active Space on 566 Johnson Avenue. This was the official group show of Bushwick Open Studios (BOS) and was put together through an open call curated by Arts in Bushwick organizers Julia Sinelnikova and Jillian Salik. The show was made up of installations, sculptures, paintings, videos and much more. It's one of the better shows I have seen in a while with some clever pieces and amazing execution.

This is my favorite piece “Living Clockwork” which is a collaborative sculpture by Loreal Prystaj and Olivier Henaff.

Artist, curator and great host Julia Sinelnikova next to her work.

About the Author: Jamie Martinez

Jamie Martinez is the founder and publisher of ARTE FUSE magazine. He is also a contemporary artist through a visual innovation he calls “Triangulism” in which he “cuts” (his own term) images into triangulated segments as a way to express their essential form. Jamie’s art has been featured in Artslife, Artribune, Artiholics, Whitehot Magazine, The Examiner, 20minutos España, Nolita Hearts, Escape into Life, The New York Optimist, and also collaborated with Diesel for a large installation in Union Square NYC and in Galleries Lafayette in Paris. He has shown in Russia, Spain, Canada, Miami and New York City. In July 2015 he participated in his first museum group show at The Queens Museum. Jamie Martinez is currently with Galerie Protégé in NYC and Zener Schon Contemporary Art in Northern California.
